In order that this might be urged in his favor in the event of suspicion falling upon him, he took formal leave of his mistress in the presence of several of his servants about ten days before the murder, taking care to notify her that she need not expect him back for at lesst a month. But the police soon found that he had been lurking about in the metropolis, from one hotel to another, under a Sctitions name. However, it was found impossible to atrest him until she herself involuntarily betrayed him by a letter she wrote from the prison ad-

Santiago saw the letter, and by calling for it himself went into the coils that were spread for him. Soon after the two were brought for trial. She was one of the most beautiful women of Madrid, and belonged to one of the most ancient families; but the judges were most inflexible. Both the lady and her paramour were sentenced to death, and they were accordingly executed. Until the last moment they solemnly protested their innocence; but just as the final cords were adjusted about their necks they made a full confession of their guilt, and acknowledged the justice of their sentence. Now need we ask how much better was it for the interests of the sex to see the laws thus vindicated than it would have been to turn the trial into a farce and allow the guilty to es-

One of the most remarkable cases in criminal annals is that of Madame Gottfried. In 1825 a gentleman named Rumpff established himself in a house to Bremen, which belonged to, and was who was, by common consent, a charming woman, and who was as much celebrated for her kindness and gentleness of manner as she was for her beauty. But all regarded her as unfortunate, and they sympathized with her accordingly; they thought it a great pity that such a ood woman should have lost two husoands, her father, mother, brother and several children, all in the course of a few brief years. She used to lament, herself, with tears in her eyes, that she had had to perform the painful duty of ordering thirteen coffins of the undertaker; but she added leaving their bedside until they were beyond the reach of all earthly ald.

Although now forty years of age, she had still claimants for her hand, for the worst thought entertained about her was that she had a poisonous breath, which was fatal to all who inhaled it at certain times, or under certain circumstances. Partly for this reason, and partly for her ill luck, the friends of Mr. Rumpff tried to dissuade him from establishing himself in her house. In many features of his character this gentleman was Coffee, Sugar, much like Dr. Burdell, the victim of a woman whose character is still more like that of Madame Gotstried. Rumpff had no faith in the reasons assigned by his friends, and he had no idea of resigning a residence that suited him on absurd grounds. Unlike Dr. Burdeil, Mr. Rumpff had a wife and family. For some time, however, the latter seemed to have great reason to congestulate himself, and his wife was, if possible, still better pleased with the change than himself, for Madame Gottfried seemed to have no other care but to render herselt agreea-

So friendly and affectionate was she to the children that they called her no other name than Aunt Gottfried The infant was doing quite well, but the nurse who had charge of it soon became so extremely ill that ene had to leave, declaring that whatever was the reason, she felt she could never be well as long as she remained in the house Nor did Mr. Rumff's apprentices fare better; they, too, were seized in turn with violent fits of vomiting, and some three months after his wife's death he became ill houself in a similar manner. Being a strong, robust man, he struggled reso lutely to overcome the supposed malady; but in rain; he could keep nothing on his atomach; everything he ate caused him the most exeruciating agonies; and his health declined from day to day. grains of white powder sprinkled over it. This attracted his attention all the more readily because he remembered to have remarked the same appearance on some salad, broth and other articles which he had recently taken from the hands of Aunt Gottfried. The suspicion of poison now occurred to him for the first time; he said nothing, bowever, but privately sent for his physician. A chemical examination soon revealed the mystery; the white powder proved to be arsenie. The symptoms of Catarrh, as they generally appear are at first very slight. Persons find they have a cold that they have frequent attacks, and are more sensitive nese may be dry, or a slight discharge, thin and acrid, afterwards becoming thick and adhesive. As the disease becomes chronic, the discharges are increased in quantity and changed in quality; they are now thick and heavy, and are hawked or coughed off. The secretions are of-fensive, causing a bad breath; the voice is thick and nasal; the eyes are weak; the sense of the smell is lessened or destroyed; deafness frequently takes place. Another common and important symptom of Catarrh is, that the person is obliged to clear his throat in the morning of a thick or slimy mucus, which has fallen down from the head during the night. A BENEFACTRESS. There is a woman in the public eye whose name had all along been associated, in our mind, with the "Yankee," "Quack," and "Humbug." But it is so no longer, and we desire to wrest her name from all such suspicious associations in all other minds. Whatever notions we may have of womanly delicacy and propriety, we will all admit that woman alone is the Nurse—the pool Nurse—the best Nurse. Whather we shall have Female Physicians or not, is a question which must be decided by time and principle, and not a matter of taste. Pride, prejudice, caprice and custom may as well behave them-selves, for if there is really a want, there will also be a supply; if there be a "calling," there will be a coming.

Nature and human society are always self-supplying and though Art and Fashion may hinder, they cannot Mrs. Winslow does not wish to treat you gentlemen Nor does she prescribe a regimen for your wives; but she modestly appears as a messenger of health and hap piness to your infants in the cradle. Is there anything improper in that? A Nurse of "30 years" experience can boldly say what is or is not good for a babe, and ought to be listened to. God speed her on her humble and happy mission. She is the most successful physician and mosi effectual benefactress our little ones ever cian and mosi effectual benefactress our little ones ever enjoyed—her doting parents not excepted.
